Roisin Fitzpatrick exhibition

Review from Washington Post, March 30, 2012

'CLARITY... Few painters or sculptors approach luminance with the same mind-set as Roisin Fitzpatrick...her near death experience made her realize the oneness in [every]thing and her outlook encompasses Asian mysticism as well as...Celtic motifs and places such as Newgrange, the prehistoric Irish landmark that floods with light every winter solstice. Newgrange is flanked by rocks that were decorated some five millennia ago, with whorls much like Fitzpatrick's...when the light hits them just right, these garlands of glass suggest larger and more primal things.'

'The artist has worked with Swarovski crystals, stitching them to backdrops of silk (usually white) to evoke shells, webs, vortexes, galaxies and other spiraling natural forms. Some of her works are on display in 'Artist of the Light' at La Luna Gallery, Palisades.'
